MONTHLY COMMENTARY

The domestic equity market rallied and the Nikkei 225 broke the all-time-high record in 1989. From early to mid-February, the market was buoyed by favorable corporate earnings results from Toyota Motor and Tokyo Electron. Also, the Yen weakened past 150 Yen per US dollar for the first time since last November, which also supported the rise in the equity market. Equity prices rose further in the domestic equity market, mainly in the semiconductor sector after US semiconductor giant NVIDIA announced earnings that far exceeded expectations later in February.

In February, the Fund's net asset value rose. The increase in the Fund's net asset value was attributable to a rise in equities related to semiconductor production equipment (SPE) and those related to sporting goods in the portfolio.

We managed our portfolio in accordance with market trends, while being wary of monetary tightening and inflation in the US and elsewhere, as well as the concerns about a slowdown in the global economy. By individual equity, the top shares in the Fund's portfolio included equities related to electrical equipment that can be expected to perform well by achieving both high unit prices and increased sales, and those related to semiconductor production equipment (SPE) which are expected to benefit from demand related to generative AI.

As in the previous month, the Fund will invest chiefly in equities in companies capable of creating a sustainable free cash flow with a clear business expansion scenario. We will leverage the bottom-up and top-down approaches, and screen and invest in up to 30 issues while seeing if there is an upside potential in the long term.
